Teachers' Day is a great time to say thanks to your teachers. You can show your gratitude by sending gifts to your teachers. Maybe beautiful flowers or a box of chocolates is a good choice. But here is another great way: send your teacher your own thank-you card. Your teachers must be happy when they receive the cards.

In Britain, thank-you cards are traditional. And they are not just for special days. You can send a thank-you card to your friend. If you know the person very well, you can even end the card with a kiss, just by writing the letter X.

When you grow up and begin to look for a job, a thank-you card is also important. No matter whether you can get a job, a thank-you card sometimes has magic powers. It helps you stand out among other people.

In a world full of cell phones and e-mails, sending a message is easy and fast. But taking your time to write "thank you" adds something important to the message. It doesn't matter how you say "thank you", as long as you say it. Because these two special words remind the person you care.

If you ask people from different countries "Could you tell me the way to the post office?", you will get different answers.

56 For example, the Japanese will say to travelers, "Go straight down to the corner. Turn left at the big hotel and go past a fruit market. The post office is across from the bus stop."

In Kansas, America, there are no towns or buildings within miles. So instead of landmarks, people will tell you directions and distance. For example, people will say, "57 Turn east, and then go another mile."

People in Greece sometimes do not even try to give directions. They will often say, "Follow me." 58

Sometimes if the person doesn't know the answer to your question, he or she, like a New Yorker, might say, "Sorry, I have no idea." But in Yucatan, Mexico, no one answers "I don't know." People there think "I don't know." is not polite. 59 A visitor can always get lost in Yucatan!

But one thing will help you wherever you are. You might not understand a person's words, but maybe you can understand his or her body language. He or she will usually point to the correct direction. 60

- A. Then he or she will take you through the street of the city to the post office.
- B. Go north two miles (英里).
- C. Because they know their small town very well.
- D. Go on in that direction and you may find the place.
- E. They usually give an answer, but often a wrong one.
- F. In Japan, people use landmarks (路标) instead of street names.

Living in a foreign country is fun, but it isn't always easy. There are many differences between cultures, and sometimes they can cause a lot of embarrassments(尴尬). I spoke to a few foreign friends about how they experienced culture shock(文化差异) in China.

Austin arrived two months ago from Europe to take part in a language program in Shanghai. Before he left, he was actually taught the differences between European and Chinese cultures, including everything from table manners to classroom behavior. However, some things have still surprised him. For example, he couldn't understand why waiters did not want to accept the tips when he gave them after meals in restaurants. I had to explain to him that people don't usually tip in China and this comes from the Confucian(儒家的,孔子的) idea that one must avoid accepting any undue(不适当的) income.

Another friend, Julia, came to Guangzhou from London to teach at a language school. After a month, she said it was strange that students were so quiet that she was the only person talking in class and it felt like the children were punishing her by making her talk to the walls! I explained to her that the children were simply respectful, but she said that it would be more respectful if they answered her questions.

And it is not just the West and the East that have cultural differences. Even Korea and China, two countries that are very close to each other, have differences too. "I thought Chinese and Korean people were similar in some ways," said my friend Ji-Hyun in perfect Chinese, "but I was wrong. In ancient times, the Chinese used to take their shoes off before entering a house. They don't do that anymore, but Korean people still do it! I keep getting that wrong even though I've been here for five years!"

In my opinion, cultural differences should simply be seen as a way of making life interesting. Imagine how boring it would be if we all did everything in exactly the same way!
